

ABSTRACT

CREATIVE PROJECT: In My Skin: Shaping the Multiracial Identity in Indiana

STUDENT: Earl L. Harris, Jr.

DEGREE: Master of Arts

COLLEGE: Communication, Information, and Media

DATE: April, 2012

PAGES: 17

This project takes viewers inside the lives of multiracial individuals in Indiana through a 60-minute documentary. The state was broken into three parts, broken into Northern, Central, and Southern parts, with each having a person chosen to profile. This is done to educate, inform, and eliminate myths in place about multiracial individuals. Shown is how each deals with day-to-day life not always being understood or fitting in. Life is explored and documented as it happens, including interviews with individuals as part of the production in order to hear “in their own words” about experiences. Other key people, family, friends, co-workers, share thoughts on the multiracial individuals also. The goal is to capture life without affecting what happens.